

Tempo, Tempo – Exhibition in the DASA in Dortmund

On June 24th, 2014 we visited the DASA in Dortmund. It's an interactive museum. In the moment they have an exhibition about time and speed-up. Mrs. Vollmer thought it would be a great idea to visit the DASA so we did it. We went on a guided tour.

The exhibition describes the time development in the centuries. We learned many things about how the time and the quickness came in our world. It was very interesting and our guide explained it very well. There were departments with things from the different centuries. They all had something to do with time. For example there were packages with "food to-go". There was described how the mail delivery system developed and how it became faster and faster. Also the news service changed with the time. Today we read the news on our tablet or see it on TV. There are always the newest news online in the space of some seconds. In the past it was very slow. Sometimes the news needed ten days to arrive in other countries or cities.

Also the means of transportation changed. In the past the people drove with a coach or they walked. Later the bike, train, ship, plane and car were invented. The train and the ship were very slow compared to today. Today we have the ICE or fast planes and ships. We can drive the car with a high speed.

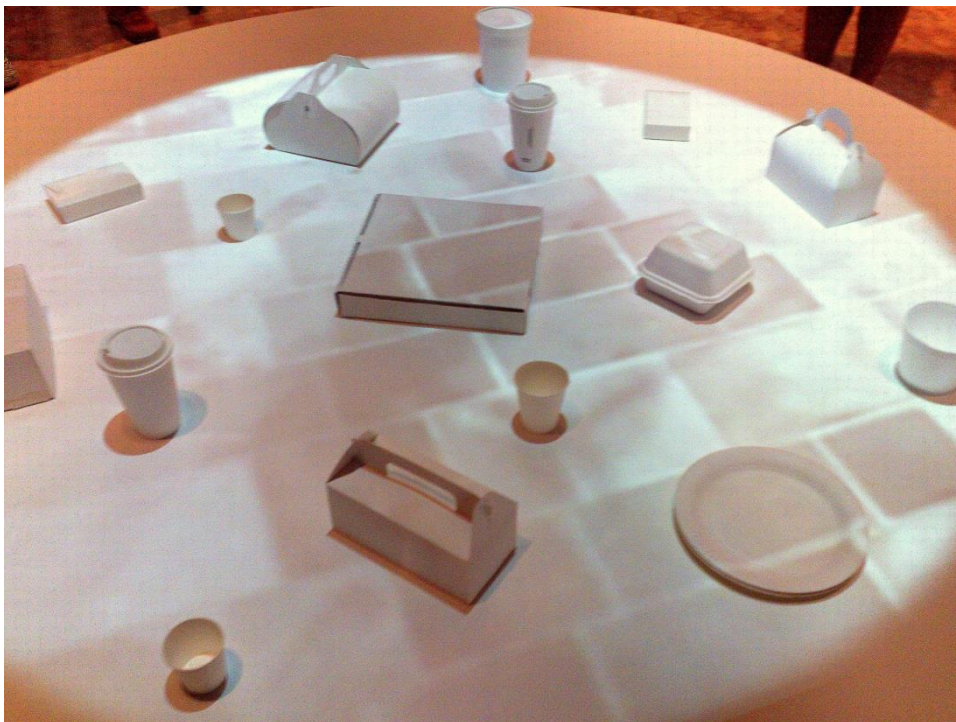

An old clock

Modern technical things for the fast life

Food "to-go"

Scales for the balance between nature, family, job, business and dates.

A buddha, which shows that you can relax sometimes.

Benita Botterhuis (German Team) :D

